[Copyrighted, 1891, by the New York Associated Press.]

London, December 5.—The French Government's overtures to the Powers for joint diplomatic action at Pekin, accompanied by a naval demonstration at the treaty ports, have met with a distinct rebuil from the English and German Governments. Semi-official Paris telegrams assert that Foreign-Minister Ribot made no definite proposals, but merely designed to ascertain the views of the different Powers. His view differs from the view which the English Foreign Office taxes. Several communications have been received at the Foreign Office through the French Embassy giving French consular reports on the state of affairs in China, and urging that England and France units to exert pressure at Pekin. Minister Ribot has had similar communications with the Governments at Berlin, Rome, and Vienna, and he has presented the position of the Chinese Government in the worst possible light.

As soon as the House of Commons opens the Opposition will demand information as to whether the Government will adhere to the practice established for a century of dissolving Parliament at the end of the session, or whether it will insist upon taking full advantage of the septennial act. St. Petershuro, December, —The Czar has issued a rescript appointing a new metropolitan of the Greek Church at Kief. In it his Majesty urges that most vigorous action should be taken against the Stundists, who, the Czar says, "are injuring more and more the faith of our fathers." The Stundists are a Protestant sect, consisting mostly of Russians from the Eastern Church, which was formed in 1817. They repudiate the sacraments and demand an equal distribution of property. The synod of the Eastern Church some time since pronounced them guity of blasphemy and anathematized them. It is expected that the sect has over 1,000,000 members. HOME, SWEET HOME. A MISAPPREHENSION.

There is already a city here—a city of hotels, stores, industries, shipping, and railroad interests, which are permanent—as permanent as those of some of the oldest cities in the Union, and which form the nucleus of a great seaport and manufacturing centre. But there is one misapprehension under which many labor, and that is that in the remarkable spread of the place it will scatter in all directions. It will so extend in time, but now it is building compactly. The business portion of the place, as I have before indicated, is crowding on the residential, and that Among those who had become believers of the Mormon religion was a family named Jarred, one of the wealthiest in Boone county. "There was one member of the Jarred family who, although with the others, lad not been converted to Mormonism. This was Miss Mildred Jarred, a beautiful girl, aged nineteen, who has a lover, A. L. Grifith, a young lumberman in this State. Although she begged piteously to be left behind, her tather and mother were obdurate, and told her to look for the last time on West Virginia soil. On the next train, which also brought twenty or more persons who were converts, young Griffith arrived to capture his lady love, if possible.

"During the night she had escaped from her father, but was caught and brought back. Griffith brought with him four friends, and after vanily attempting to induce Mr. Jarred to allow Griffith to see Mildred a police officer was told of the affair, and he, by gaining admittance to the room Mildred was in, told her that Griffith was near and she could see him if she wished. In the mean time the Mormon elders were using all their persuasive powers to induce her to accompany them. But the young maiden heeded them not. A few minutes later she and Griffith were together and decided at once to marry. She not being twenty-one, no license could be secured in this State without her father's consent, which was not given.
